

Tom Suchla left Monday for Minneapolis and other points to look after the manufacture and the placing upon the market of his patented lumber car-unloader which is one of his latest inventions. The apparatus is wedged between the sides of a car door opening and works on a pivot and rollers. Lumber can be unloaded much easier and quicker than any other method heretofore invented and those who have used them in the local yards speak of it in the highest terms and state they would not be without one for many times the money. Mr. Suchla expects to get his apparatus installed in several of the largest lumber firms in Minneapolis to demonstrate it's value.
