

The little sorrel team belonging to the City Meat Market which they use on the meat wagon, took a notion last Monday to have a free-for-all race all by themselves. They started from the butcher shop, the lines having slipped from a plank on the side-walk to which it had been tied and the team started on a run around the block. John Syvertson, who was on the wagon at the time concluded to take a jump for "liberty," not being able to get hold of the lines and the gait becoming a little too speedy. In rounding the corner of the First National bank they attempted to cross the sidewalk right back of the bank. It stopped them rather suddenly but it caused the demolition of one wheel.
