Another boy was lost last week— Walter, the five year old son of Mr. John Houghton got out of bed in his sleep and with nothing on but his undershirt and wandered about a mile and a half from home. He was not found until about 11 o'clock when he was discovered in a wheat field nearly dead with the heat. He was hiding, he said, because he was afraid of Indians. The little fellow is all right, now, however, and his escapade had no serious consequences, beyond badly frightening his parents.
