

Obituary.

Died, on Monday afternoon, March 28th, 1892, C. W. Blanchard, of cancer of the liver, aged 51 years. The deceased came to North Dakota about a year ago and had been living with his son-in-law, Western Houghton. About last Christmas he was taken sick and from that time until he was stricken with death he gradually wasted away. He was a great sufferer, but bore his trouble heroically, trying to make the burdens of those around him easy while he suffered at times excruciating pains. He leaves a family of several children, mostly grown up, to mourn the loss of a father. The funeral ceremony took place in the Congregational church, Wednesday morning at 11 o'clock, Rev. G. R. Searles preaching the sermon. After the sermon the funeral cortege conducted the remains to the Cooperstown cemetery where his remains were laid to rest. He was a free mason, a "square" and highly respected citizen, and to those who got well acquainted with him during his short residence in this community, a warm hearted friend. All that is born must die and he has only answered the summons of the great builder of the universe and gone before, whither we must all follow,
