

Mrs. Wm. Spangenberg created quite a little sensation in town Monday evening. She, of course, has never been quite right since she returned from Jamestown, and on Monday afternoon about 1 o'clock she took a notion that she would skip out in the storm, which she did, taking with her the youngest child, a four year old boy. She had nothing on her head but a handkerchief and no mittens or any other protection for her hands. The little boy left her and returned home. About seven o'clock in the evening, when Mr. Spangenberg went home to supper, he first learned of the absence of his wife and gave the alarm, and willing friends were soon out on foot and with teams trying to find her. She was soon found in Serumgard's barn on the outskirts of town, in a numbed condition and her hands slightly frozen. She was taken home and is doing well under the care of friends and the family.
