

Mr. and Mrs. George Newberry celebrated their twenty-third wedding anniversary last Friday. They had a small company to tea and spent a few hours very enjoyably. The editor and his family were invited, but a previous engagement made it impossible to be present. There is one thing connected with this pleasant gathering that we can rejoice over, and that is the rich plum pudding that found its way to our home by the kindness of Mrs. Newberry, and we want to say that the lady knows how to make the genuine article, and we claim to be a good judge of plum puddings. The Courier congratulates this happy couple on their anniversary and hopes that twenty-three years hence that they will still be around these parts, happy and prosperous, and will not forget to send us some more plum pudding.
