

William Kerber dropped into State's Attorney Bartlett's office Tuesday afternoon and wanted a warrant issued for the arrest of his brother John, which warrant was promptly refused. It seems that the festive William rented his farm to his brother for three years, which time expires April 1st. William went to his place and undertook to take possession before the time was up, and of course John objected and was going to punch William out of the house. Bill drew a revolver and pointed it at John and told him to "look a leedle oudt, by Jin'ing," and that kind of brought matters to a sharp stop. After awhile John finally got to the windward side of William and hopping onto Bill's back, knocked him over and called on his boys to go for him. They gave William a few punches and for doing this good service a warrant for John's arrest was asked for. Kerber had better behave himself. He is a genuine nuisance and a decidedly quarrelsome fellow.
