

There was great consternation in the Newberry family last Thursday when Miss Ethel's horse came home on a dead jump with only two wheels of the buggy and no driver, and for a short time the flood gates were opened and a tearful time resulted until a few minutes later Miss Ethel arrived on the scene not the worse for wear. It seemed that the king-bolt came out of the gearing of the buggy and the rear end of the vehicle fell down and the other end being hitched to Pocahontas—which is the horse, things did not go right and the animal, with a good supper in mind lit out for home leaving the school-ma'am in a heap in the road, where she had been dumped without her consent. Luckily this happened only about one mile and a half from town and Miss Newberry walked home arriving only a few minutes after the horse none the worse for the experience—and without the consent of the governed.
