

Charles H. Russel was killed in a railroad accident in Lowden, Iowa, recently. Mr. Russel will be remembered by a good many Hannaford people as just a year ago he was employed for a month or more in the Enterprise office. He was a peculiar character in many ways, but when in the mood he was an excellent workman, and possessed an engaging personality. He was a sufferer from "itching feet," as he termed it, meaning thereby his restless disposition which made it impossible for him to remain more than a few weeks in any one place. He had made it a habit to spend the fall months of every year in North Dakota and as a result he was a familiar figure to a large number of the editors of the state. He is survived by his wife and a little son Sylvester. Mrs. Mary Russel is an employee of the Orphans Home at Wittenberg, Wis., and is highly spoken of by the management. Charles H. Russel will be missed in a great many places where his visits had become as regular as the return of migratory birds.
