

Hans Brudwick, who is working for Iver Haugen east of town, suffered a severe accident as the result of a runaway one day last week. He was driving a four-horse team to a manure spreader when the horses became frightened and ran away. Mr. Brudwick, who was on the ground, attempted to stop them but his feet became entangled in the lines and he was dragged for half a mile before he was able to extricate himself. A wheel of the spreader passed over his body and he suffered other injuries which, though serious, were fortunately not fatal in their nature.
