

Lars Lerum's nine months old baby daughter had a narrow escape from death by drowning last Friday. The child was left a few moments alone in the kitchen and managed to fall head first into a pail partly filled with water which was standing on the floor. Mrs. Lerum came into the room and rescued the child from its perilous position and at once started with the child for the field where her husband was working almost a mile away. The child soon began to show signs of reviving, and word was hastily sent to Dr. Benson, who did all that was possible and at the present time the little girl is apparently fully recovered.
