At the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. B. J. Miller, Tenth Street North, Saturday evening, by Rev. W. L. Van Horn, Mrs. Jennie A. Benedict was married to Dr. S. J. Hill. The ceremony was witnessed by relatives and intimate friends of the bride and groom and after some quiet festivities the bridal party returned to the home of the doctor on Third Avenue South. The same evening a meeting of the Mecca Chapter of the O. E. S., of which the genial doctor and his bride are members, was held. Acting on the presumption that the newly married pair would go on a wedding trip, a party of Star ladies repaired to the outgoing evening N. P. train, but they counted without their hosts, as the happy couple did not put in an appearance. The party then engaged carriages and drove to the home of the doctor where he and his family were chatting in the twilight. The doctor spied the visitors as they approached the house and guessed their object, but he met them at the door and extended to them a very cordial invitation to enter. There were congratulations amid the discussion of ice cream and cake—and expressions of surprise that the happy couple did not go on their wedding trip. The Stars confessed that they had been nicely caught and found out that the doctor knew a trick or two.
