

in last week and certainly makes a fine appearance. The improvements in every way in connection with the building are modern. The upstairs has been divided, one part having been made into a hall for secret society work, as well as for other uses. The other part is used for furniture. A mammoth elevator has been erected in the rear for hoisting furniture.

John Carlson was handed a package last Saturday evening in the way of a ten dollar Confederate bill, which he accepted at its face value. When the error was detected, the bill was thought to be a counterfeit; however, on looking at it for a few moments, the "Confederate States of America" appeared painfully visible; it was then that he had that queer sensation which one experiences when he knows that he has been buncoed. As the benefactor forgot to leave his card, the relic will no doubt be disposed of with difficulty.
