

Dover School

House Burned

Thursday morning, just after school had been called, fire broke out in the basement of the Dover consolidated school house and was under such headway when discovered that the teachers and children barely had time to get out of the building. Very few of them had time to secure their books, wraps etc. While the cause of the fire is not definitely known it is presumed the furnace had become overheated, as the weather had changed suddenly during the night, making it necessary to fire up unusually heavy to warm the building Thursday morning.
