

Last Friday night, as Miss Carrie Putnam was participating in the high school halloween party at the school house, she was caused to trip and fall down the lower stairway as she was about to descend it, which resulted in injuries to her foot and head, rendering her unconscious for a few minutes. She was taken at once to her room at Martin McWethy's where first aid attention was given, and after spending Saturday and Sunday in her room she managed to attend to her school duties Monday. It appears that at an early stage of the affair Mr. Rygg, the principal, left to attend a dance, leaving the three lady teachers with the responsibility of carrying out the remainder of the program, whereupon a number of boys and young men went into the building through a basement window and proceeded to annoy those giving the party. It was while the teachers were trying to chase the intruders out that one of them, accidentally, no doubt, caused the mishap referred to. It will or should, prove a warning to such parties to stay where they belong hereafter.
