Last Thursday night, Miss Mona Winter, who has been staying in Cooperstown, received a slight scratch on her left hand from a can opener she was using, from which blood poisoning set in immediately. By Friday morning the infection had become so severe that a doctor was called. The hand was lanced, but no apparent relief was obtained, and that evening she was taken to Valley City where several incisions were made in her hand and arm. This checked the poison's spread but the pain is still very severe and it may be several weeks before she is able to return home.
