

Banister Banter

Winsome Wit and Wisdom

A natural law is as sacred as a moral principle—Louis Agassiz

Teacher: "Paul, you may give me a sentence using the word banquets."

Paul: "When the band quits we will have some music"

Don't eat in a hurry. Be "aisy" about it. Go slow. Nobody that bolts his food can live long. The long livers are slow eaters.—Wilmer Atkinson. The above statement is a new one on us. We never knew that livers ate at all. At least not the long kind. However it's good advice to the most of us so I pass it on

Our H. S. Philosopher

Teacher "What is a closed line?"
Pupil "It's a line where all ends meet."

Prosperity is the best prize a man can gain, and reputation is the next best bet, but the man who wins and enjoys both of these boons has received the highest crown of all.—Pindar.

Teacher [to small pupil] "Why are you scratching yourself so Doris?"

Doris "Because I'm the only one who knows where I itch."

In his speeches, and we may add his stories, the great Lincoln still lives, with an influence for good among men.

J. B. McLure

Jack: "Prof. thinks he has just discovered a new murder mystery."

How: "What are the clues?"

Jack: "He just found a boy's nose buried in a book in the library."

Who is the smartest man that ever lived with the exception of our Lord? I say Socrates. He himself once said that he knew more than any other man because he knew that he knew nothing.—Our. H S. Philosopher

Overheard during the noon hour: Van: We have a binder at home that's run for seventeen years and is still in a fairly good condition. Cliff: You mean a reaper.

Prof. " Sit up in your seat Johnnie. You might go to sleep!
