

Speaking of last weeks blizzard, Martin McWethy recalled one that started April 24, forty-eight years ago and lasted two days and nights. He and another man were batching it in a shack built of rough boards between which were wide cracks permitting the snow to drift in so fast that they had to shovel out frequently. Orion Rhodes also recalls a storm on the 5th of May, several years ago when snow was drifted to the top of the pump house on the farm