

Willie Starr was struck in the forehead by the flying pieces of an emery wheel which burst while he was running it at high speed Sunday. The bone was crushed, but as he was alone he succeeded in bandaging it and went to the drug store for assistance. He was advised to go to Cooperstown at once so C. W. Fallen took him over, where the wound was given proper attention. Had the blow been harder the inner bone would have given way, probably proving fatal.
