

The masquerade dance given by the Legion boys Tuesday night was well patronized in spite of the blizzard that started during the afternoon. Thirty eight couples were there, and in addition to these there were many spectators. A prize was given to the best dressed couple and also to the most comically dressed couple, the first prize being won by Harold Davidson who was dressed as Sir Walter Raleigh and Miss Iva Mayer who wore a fancy costume, all in red. The second prize was won by Clarence Ebentier who was dressed to represent a hayseed farmer, and his partner was Mr. Brewer of Kensal, owner of the costumes, who impersonated a woman. The judges who awarded the prizes were Joe Ebentier, Ed Rhodes, O. B. Hoff Mrs A J Melgard, Mrs. O. B. Hoff and Mrs. Joe Ebentier. Music was provided by the local orchestra. The hall was again most beautifully decorated, being as before the handiwork of John Duncker.

During the night the storm became so bad that it was impossible to leave the hall, so the dance was continued until daylight, when breakfast, consisting of cookies and coffee, was served in addition to the regular midnight supper. Practically everybody who came in from the country was compelled to remain in town the following day and night. But they took advantage of the opportunity to tread the boards again, so on Wednesday night the hall once more rang to the merry strains of the music.

Thursday morning the storm had spent itself and the folks made their departure homeward with this event doubtless firmly fixed in their minds for all time to come.

The boys desire to thank the ladies for their donations for the supper.
