

Hans Simenson received a letter this week from friends in Minnesota giving him news of a younger brother, S. H. Simenson of whom he has not heard for 23 years. The latter went to Alaska during the gold rush in 1896, and for many years had no opportunity to communicate with any of his relatives. Later he lost all trace of them. Six months ago he came back to Minnesota, but failed to learn the whereabouts of his brother here. He returned to Alaska soon after, and the folks here, having obtained his address, have written to him in the hopes of hearing from him. He was successful in the search for gold, and is said to be well fixed financially.
