

Tuesday morning some of the neighbors went to Ingebtit Simenson's house, and failing to get a response to their knock, secured a key and opened the door. They were horrified to find him unconscious from hard coal gas, which escaped from the base burner. They at once called Dr. Lewis, who succeeded in reviving him, although he was pretty badly overcome. He has since about recovered from it.