

Married Wednesday

C. T. Hartho, proprietor of the Waldorf Confectionery, after enjoying all the ups and downs of single bliss, deserted that life last Wednesday, when he took as a life partner, Miss Emily Anderson, who agreed to take him for better or worse.

It has been known for some time that an agreement had been made between the two to enter double harness and trot together, but they kept the date a secret, and yesterday afternoon, with the aid of an auto, they made their get-away to Jamestown, the groom becoming rather shaky before getting away, for he well knew what it meant if he was caught stealing this girl. Well they arrived in Jamestown and got the necessary piece of paper, which was carefully carried to Rev. James Anderson of the Methodist church, and after he got them over their nervousness, they were pronounced as man and wife.

They left on an evening train for the twin cities for a short wedding trip, after which they will return to this city and go to housekeeping in the Frank Lundeen's house. Thus closes another chapter in these young peoples lives.
