W. H. POLLY DISPOSES OF LOCAL MARKET TO WELL KNOWN
FARMER

A business deal, which has been under consideration for some time, was finally brought to a close the first of the week, whereby Jasper Dick became the owner of the Courtenay Meat Market, taking possession Tuesday morning.

Mr. Dick informed the editor that he has turned the business over to his son, Charles, who will be in charge at all times.

Charles is well known here, a young man of good habits, one who has proven himself worthy of consideration among his associates, and although entering upon his first business venture in life, we bespeak for him success from the beginning.

Mr. Dick will be supplied with fresh meat from the farm of his father, who has a fine lot of hogs and cattle at the present time, and it will be his intention to devote his time to stock raising mostly from now on.

Mr. Polly, who has been the owner, has not come to any decision as to his future plans, but intimates that he may decide to settle down to farm life on his farm, south of town.
