
Kicked by Horse

Valley City Times-Record: John Carlson, about 58 years old, laborer, was almost instantly killed Tuesday by the kick of a horse which he was unharnessing. The man has been employed for several years on the Carl Newman farm, a few miles from this city. According to information, the man had been working the team, and had brought them into the barn and started to unharness them. One of the horses was a little mean, and the man slapped it with a strap or something. He was standing about two or three feet behind the horse, when it struck out with one of its hind feet. The hoof did not hit him but the hock of the leg struck him just above the stomach, knocking the wind completely out of him. He lived about two or three minutes after the accident.
