Friday was by no means a fair day but in spite of the chilly weather Messrs. Oscar Storlie and Geo. Medley took a dip in the waters of the Bald Hill creek. Of course it wasn't intended but nevertheless they enjoyed their first bath of the bathing season in the creek. It happened this way: While driving along the banks of the creek, looking for some stray calves and evidently interested in conversation they came to a point close to the water where the slope in the bank was too sharp and the buggy, horse and the two gentlemen were somewhat surprised a moment later to find themselves in the chilly water. It became necessary for Mr. Medley to wade out further into the water in order to free the horse from the buggy, and as soon as the horse was free, off it went for home and the men were obliged to walk home. We understand the two gentlemen are none the worse off for their bathing in the creek out of season.
