

Charles Brickson, the thirteen-year-old son of Louis W. Brickson, who was cooking for the Great Northern fence crew that recently worked at Hannaford, was instantly killed at Minneapolis one day last week when he climbed a 50-foot pole of the General Electric Co., and six thousand volts passed through his body.

---