

Edgar Gustafson, who has been attending the University of Wisconsin, is now secretary of the government employment bureau with headquarters at Madison, Wis. The bureau was organized for the purpose of securing men for positions in government factories and shops, and at the same time not to deprive certain necessary industries of their men. The problem of keeping factories and farms supplied with sufficient men for increased production, at a time when hundreds of thousands of young men are being called to the army and navy, is a big one, and many states as well as the federal government are taking steps to solve it.