

Sutton Reporter: F. J. Kingsley had a close call Saturday, while crossing the railroad track. He had a load of wheat on a sled and was well on the track when the stock train, going at the speed of the fast passenger trains whistled a warning. He had the presence of mind to urge his horses forward, thus clearing all but the rear end of the sled which was hit, and the load with the exception of about twenty bushels, scattered in every direction. The engineer, in trying to slow down, set his brakes so tight that the drivers slid on the track for several hundred feet and were worn flat.
