

J. H. VanScolik left his car in front of the opera house at Jamestown for a short time and returned to find it missing. Van Scolik was suspicious that some of his friends had taken the car to go to Spiritwood lake, and borrowing another car, made a quick trip to that popular summer resort. He found the car soon after reaching the lake and although he lay in wait for some time his friends failed to return.

