

Ole Fogderud of Fairmead, Cal., has been spending the past week in this community looking after his farm interests. He is well satisfied with his California home, but states that there are pests to bother the farmer there as well as here. This year a great deal of damage was done to fruit trees by rabbits and squirrels, and there are other dangers to which the fruit crop is subjected. However, there is no country with a better climate than California.