Grace City Gazette: Last Thursday while we were taking our weekly gymnastic exercises with the old Washington, we were most agreeably surprised by two friends of ours, a runaway team of horses, who made us a pleasant but very short call. Departing they left a goodly load of coal by our door to show their appreciation of our efforts in the publishing business. We, of course, were very thankful for their thoughtfulness and kind consideration of our service; and rejoiced over the prospect of keeping warm for another month. But the joy did not last. Friday morning, the owner of the team came and took the coal back saying the horses were not of age and not responsible for their action.
