

In a letter to the Enterprise Lars Lerum states that he had arrived safely as far as New York on his trip to Norway, and had greatly enjoyed the trip so far. He states that it was raining when he left Hannaford and it rained continually all the way to Chicago. The trip was made in a special tourist train, and as they were nearly all Norwegians, Mr. Lerum felt right at home and enjoyed to the limit the trip, his company and the scenery along the way.
