

G. K. Ness, editor of the Grace City Gazette, has bought himself a horseless carriage, and announces the fact in his paper as follows: "Ye editor, having acquired too much avoirdupois lately found walking too strenuous and invested in a H'l ol' fiver the other day and now he says he 'won't hardly take no dust from nobody,' so when he attempts to pass you on the road it might be to your mutual interest to give him half road. Until he gets more accustomed to the steering wheel it will, perhaps be better to give him all of the road—and the ditches too.
