

J. M. Nickerson states in a letter that he has moved around quite a bit since landing in France, but is now in a position where he will have a steady address for a while. He says among other things: "I am getting along O. K. but the United States will look pretty good to all of us when we get back. That isn't saying anybody wants to go back until this thing is settled and settled right. You know as much about when that will be as we do. I had the honor of hearing General Pershing a while back. Believe me, he's a soldier in every inch and he's the man for the place. I haven't run across anyone I knew in the states, but found a namesake, a sergeant named Nickerson, and have seen a sea captain of the same name."
