

Aloander Peterson, son of C. L. Peterson, was struck by lightning on last Thursday afternoon. He was standing in the doorway of his father's barn when the building was hit by lightning, the bolt passing so close to Aloander that he was rendered unconscious. He was alone in the barn at the time and it was about half an hour before he recovered and regained strength sufficient to go to the house. He has some bruises on his face as a reminder of the adventure, otherwise he has fully recovered from the injury.