

While Geo. Riley, Wm. Olson and Ole Forseth, section men on the G. N., were coming into town on the speeder at noon Thursday, they met what might easily have proved a fatal accident. They came from the east and noticed that a freight train was standing on the track, but expected to be able to cross the bridge across the creek. However, the freight started to back up, and the men were compelled to jump before they got clear across the bridge. Only Riley was hurt. He had his knee cap fractured, and was taken to the railroad hospital at Breckenridge the same day.
