In no way can disease be so surely prevented as by keeping the system in perfect condition. Brown's Iron Bitters ensures perfect health through the changing seasons, it disarms the danger from impure water and miasmatic air, and it prevents Consumption, Kidney and Liver Disease, &c.

H. S. Berlin, Esq., of the well-known firm of H. S. Berlin & Co., Attorneys, Le Droit Building, Washington, D. C., writes, Dec. 5th, 1881:

Gentlemen: I take pleasure in stating that I have used Brown's Iron Bitters for malaria and nervous troubles, caused by overwork, with excellent results.

Beware of imitations. Ask for Brown's Iron Bitters, and insist on having it. Don't be imposed on with something recommended as "just as good." The genuine is made only by the Brown Chemical Co. Baltimore, Md.

THE "DUDE."

A Study of His Development.

Dude is said to be originally a London music-hall term, but it has been transplanted here, and its constant use shows that it is, for some reason, well fitted to take a permanent place in the vocabulary of fashion. Many of our readers may not know what a dude is, and some of them, perhaps, do not suspect his existence. The allusions to him in the press are of that sort which seems to imply contempt—as in the case of the story bearing evident marks of "reportorial" invention, of a dude pursued up Fifth Avenue by a cat—and yet are, at the same time, obscure. We shall, therefore, to guard against all misconceptions and suspicion of unfairness, describe what we understand a dude to be. A dude, then, is a young man, not over twenty-five, who may be seen on Fifth Avenue between the hours of three and six, and may be recognized by the following distinguishing marks and signs. He is dressed in clothes which are not calculated to attract much attention, because they are fashionable without being ostentatious. It is, in fact, only to the close observer that the completeness and care of the costume of the dude reveals itself. His trousers are very tight; his shirt-collar, which must be clerical in its cut, encircles his neck so as to suggest that a sudden movement of the head in any direction will cause pain; he wears a tall black hat, pointed shoes, and a cane, (not a "stick," which should, we believe, properly have a silver handle, is carried by him under his right arm, projecting forward at an acute angle, somewhat in the manner that a word is carried by a general at review, but with a civilian mildness that never suggests a military origin for the custom. When the dude takes off his hat, or when he is seen in the evening at the theatre, it appears that he parts his hair in the middle and "bangs" it. There is believed to be a difference of opinion among dudes as to whether they ought to wear white gutters.—New York Nation.

A Queer Sort of a Joke to Play.
Washington Correspondence of the Boston Traveller.

The cash office of the treasurer's department in the treasury building often contains many thousands of dollars, and great care is taken against the possible depredations of thieves. The room is very high studded and contains a gallery which can be reached by the general public from the floor above. The interest clerk is an awkward haired individual of the most nervous temperament, and notwithstanding the fact that he has been in his position for many years he has never lost sight of the tremendous responsibility of handling the vast sums of money which daily pass into his possession. His nervousness has grown chronic, and he is made the butt of many a quiet practical joke. The greatest of these was played some time ago by one of his intimate personal friends, who obtained permission from Treasurer Gillilan to try his little scheme. The gentleman armed himself with about 25 feet of twine, and attached to one end of it a machine composed of a steel rod pointed as fine as a needle, and a solid piece of rubber as a ballast. He stationed himself in the gallery directly over the interest clerk's desk, where there were heaps of money all nicely done up in packages. Then he slowly let down his sting until it was directly over a large package, and releasing his hold on the twine, the steel rod impaled a bundle of notes, which he quickly drew to the gallery, and having secured them, rushed to the treasurer's office with the prize, which proved to be $8,000 in legal tender. Meanwhile the interest clerk saw his money going skyward and gave the general alarm, but not in time, however, to detect the culprit. The clerk was nearly crazy when he received a note signed "James Gillilan," asking him to come at once to the treasurer's office. He went as fast as his legs could carry him, and imagine his joy when the treasurer handed him the missing $8,000, advising him to be more careful that his money did not "take unto itself wings and fly away" in the future. This practical joke has taught the department a good lesson, to wit, that it was possible for a clever thief to abstract money in the method mentioned, and so double precautions have been taken, and under the existing state of affairs such an event is not at all likely to happen again.

The "Game He Did Not Understand."

"What's the game you speak of?" "Euchre. Ah! I see you're rather surprised. And I am not surprised you're surprised. But, take my word for it, even so simple and apparently honest household game as euchre can be made more effective than poker with marked cards and a little change in the number of pasteborads used in the game. Just look at this pack. Nothing peculiar about it, you say. Well, you're mistaken. You see, for example, that instead of being cut perfectly straight along the edges the cards are cut like a wedge, tapering slightly at one end. Half the pack is cut with the bottom of the cards narrower than the top, and the other half with the tops narrower than the bottoms. Observe the effect when I draw a pack through my hand to separate the cards. Presto! I have all the clubs and spades in one hand, and all the hearts and diamonds in the other. That is one advantage gained, the possession of which is highly valuable to a player. Now examine the backs of the pasteborads. You can't see anything, you say. No, of course you can't. But if I point out to you a pencil dot here on this ace of spades, and another dot on another space on this queen of clubs, and so on through the pack, show you ace in 23 different positions, you will doubtless tumble to the fact that it means something. Well, it does have a pretty big meaning. It is that I can tell the denomination of every card in the pack by simply glancing at the dot on the back, and by "cutting" the cards I get at the seemingly unascertainable fact whether a certain card is a diamond, a spade, or a club, or a heart."—Talk with a Gambler in New York Sun.

Twenty-four Hours to Live.
From John Kuhn, Lafayette, Ind., who announces that he is now in "perfect health," we have the following: "One year ago I was, to all appearance, in the last stages of consumption. Our best physicians gave me case up. I finally got so low that our doctor said I could not live twenty-four hours. My friends then purchased a bottle of Dr. William Hall's Balm for the Lungs, which considerably benefited me. I continued until I took nine bottles. I am now in perfect health, having used no other medicine."
