

—A good one on Charley Ferguson. Biding out to his claim one day he sees not his humble dwelling. With all the wrath of an injured man he declares the person who tore it down and took away the lumber the worst kind of a thief. We suggest Boreas as the culprit and intimate he might not have been exactly on the old building site. He listens not, but secures competent architects and with a complete invoice of lumber again erects his mansion. Facts developed later proves that his former home is still on the claim (in a horizontal condition) and that he had not been within half a mile of it.
