"HOIST WITH HIS OWN PETARD."
William H. Scoville steps into a Vat of Boiling Grease and is Instantly Killed.
"My God!"
 There was a swift, headlong plunge into a huge vat of boiling grease, and a bubbling, seething mass of putrefaction closed over the dead body of William H. Scoville. Shortly before 7 o'clock last evening Mr. Scoville stepped into his soap factory at 40 Fulton street, Chicago, to see that everything was in order previous to his departure for home. As he stood near one of the huge vats in which the fat and refuse are tried, the contents boiled up, splashing him with the greasy torrents that poured over the top of the caldron and filling the room with blinding clouds of steam. The force of the incident explosion showered the rafters with the slimy mass. To escape the scalding volume of boiling grease that threatened to overflow the floor, Mr. Scoville turned and ran, but, blinded by the steam that even then had filled the room, he headed directly for another steaming caldron. His foot struck the platform surrounding the seething hell and his rapid flight had given him too great an impetus to enable him to recover his equilibrium. With a despairing shriek of agony that rang through the gloomy building with a terror that will never be forgotten by those who heard it, Mr. Scoville plunged into certain death, the hissing grease smothering his last cry in a low wail of anguish. Ten feet beneath the bubbling, boiling, hissing surface lay the father of one of that panic-stricken group, and the kind-hearted, generous employer of the others. Not a finger could be raised in his behalf. To attempt a rescue meant certain death to anyone who dared make the effort. But one course was open, and that was to draw off the half rendered soap, and thus reach the body of the unfortunate victim. Fully an hour was occupied in the work before the prostrate form could be distinguished lying at the bottom of the vat. Gentle hands lifted him tenderly from his slimy bed and bore him away. The scalding immersion had parboiled the dead man's flesh. The grease had been so literally besmeared about him that the remains scarcely bore the semblance of a human being, and none who had known Mr. Scoville in life would have recognized that burned and distorted form that lay outstretched in the motionless quiet of death. The remains were taken to the morgue to be prepared for burial.

Flayed Alive by a Quack Doctor.
 Dr. Franklin Pierce was found guilty of manslaughter at Worcester, Massachusetts, May 28th. He attended Mrs. Bemis, and after ascribing to her several different diseases, ordered her to be swathed from head to foot in kerosene bandages. The effect was like that of fire—to entirely destroy the outer skin. On his second visit he caused kerosene to be poured on the bandages without removing them to see the effect of his treatment. The patient suffered tortures at first, but not so much in the second application, because sensitiveness had been destroyed. The woman soon died. Several of the doctor's patients testified that they had used kerosene blisters with excellent effect, but the jury was out only ten minutes.

Older than Tilden.
 In Mulberry, Ohio, lives John Long, colored, one hundred and forty-five years old. His wife, after eighty years of married life, died five years ago aged one hundred and ten. He was in Alexandria when Washington and Braddock went through to the Indian war in 1755, and was in Nashville when General Jackson started for New Orleans in 1814.

Economical.
 A man was found dead near Syracuse, and the finders sold his skin to a tanner and his body to a medical college. His skin was made up into slippers. It was thicker and tougher than ordinary calf skin.

Frank James will show up at Northfield for trial next fall if the citizen will offer any inducements to warrant him in going so far out of his road.

"Where shall we go this summer?" is a question now agitating Fargo society. The Republican would suggest that you first go around among your creditors and settle your bills.—Fargo Republican.

Saturday Andrew Larson, from Washburn, with the aid of his father, endeavored to unload two small pigs from his wagon to which were hitched a span of lively mules. The old man was standing on the whiffletrees, when the pigs commenced to squeal, frightening the mules. The old man was jolted under the wheels and killed.

In one of the Philippine Islands it is customary when a young fellow asks the old folks for their daughter to send her into the woods at sunrise, and if the lover finds her before sunset she is his. If not, he forfeits all claim. The girl is given one hour the start. This would be a snap in this section. She would have to climb for the St. event.
