

DANGER IN HIS JOB.

FARLEY TALKS OF HIS LIFE AS A STRIKE BREAKER.

Love of Adventure Caused Him to Take Up His Queer Occupation—Is Hated by Union Workmen Everywhere.

New York Special. James Farley, acknowledged head of an army of experienced strike-breakers, is now in New York, whither he was called by the officials of the elevated road systems which were threatened with a strike. When asked about himself Farley said:

"It was an accident, in a way, that made me take up the business of breaking strikes. During the car strike in Brooklyn, in 1895, I was employed as sort of foreman over a small number of non-union men. That was the first time I ever had anything to do with fighting a strike. The excitement pleased me, and when the strike was broken 15 of the men who had gone with me on cars through the crowds asked me to take their names and addresses and call upon them again the next time I was mixed up in a strike. This request showed me that there are a large number of men always ready to go a long ways simply to get into a fight.

"Since then my records show over 30,000 men have worked with me at strike-breaking in the last nine years. A great many of these men, of course, have married and settled down and now lead quiet lives. They are out of the strike-breaking business."

The most vicious mobs he had encountered, he said, were in Waterbury and other New England towns, but the most deadly were met with in Pennsylvania and Virginia. When asked to describe his narrowest escapes, he said in his quiet way to the New York World reporter:

"The closest shave I ever had was when I went to Scranton, Pa., a few years ago to end a strike. We started to run a car past a place called Mudtown, a mining village. We were told that we never would get the car

RICH MATRIMONIAL PRIZE.

Miss Bertha Krupp Who Has a Fortune of $125,000,000 and Is Handsome Besides.

Berlin (Germany) Special. Miss Krupp, who on the death of her father became chief proprietor of the world-famed Krupp works, at Essen, in Germany, is the richest girl in the world. A great deal of the artillery of Russia and Japan, France, Germany and Italy was manufactured at the Krupp works; and during the South African war England had to apply to the Krupp works to supply urgently needed weapons. Practically every gun on every Russian and Japanese warship has been constructed in the Krupp works, and similarly every gun mounted on every German warship and every Italian warship bears the Krupp trademark. Sweden and Norway, Denmark, Holland, Belgium, Spain, Portugal, Greece, Turkey, Switzerland, and all the South American countries are equally dependent on the Krupp works for their naval and military armaments. Miss Krupp is a charming German girl, who wields her power with discretion and generosity. The city of Essen, with its 100,000 inhabitants, is practically her private property, so that she possesses almost despotically power over her 25,000 employees and their families.

The kingdom over which Bertha Krupp reigns is one of enormous magnitude. Employed in her various works are 4,190 officials and 45,289 workmen. The total number of the workmen and of the women and children dependent on them exceeds 100,000. Among the establishments controlled by the company owning the name of Krupp are included not only the famous steel works at Essen, but numerous coal and iron mines, large shipbuilding yards iron foundries in various parts of the empire, machine works, a stretch of country 20 miles long for artillery practice, mines of various minerals in Spain, and a flourishing line of shipping, with its headquarters at Rotterdam.

All Germany is awaiting the announcement of the coming marriage of Fraulein Krupp. Herr Deichmann, the son of a Cologne banker, is named as the fortunate man.

Young Duchess Wood by German Crown Prince Is Pretty, Rich and Good Housekeeper.

Berlin (Germany) Special. Duchess Cecilia, the bride of the crown prince of Germany, is 17 years old. Her only brother is grand duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, and her eldest sister is the wife of the Danish crown prince. She is pretty and clever, and was described by her future husband the other day as a "sensible and charming" young woman, who had made him "immensely happy." Her girlhood has been spent at Cannes, where her mother has a villa noted for its beauty, and at her brother's palace in Mecklenburg-Schwerin. Her eyes are brown, her hair is light and she is tall and slight. Her disposition is sweet, and her tastes domestic. She is a good housekeeper and is said to be a firm believer in "Kirohe, Kinder, Kuche" (church, children, kitchen), as the fields for woman's work. It is said the crown prince proposed across a table while sipping a cup of tea with the young duchess.

First Seedless Orange Tree.

The parent tree of all the seedless oranges of the United States may be seen in the orangery of the agricultural department, Washington. It came from Bahia, Brazil. Buds from the Brazilian tree were grafted upon native plants, and as these became sturdy the department sent specimens to Florida and California.

NORTH DAKOTA NEWS

Took a Sparkler.

A well dressed woman who lives in the city visited the jewelry store of Frank V. Kent, at Grand Forks, and asked to be shown some diamond rings. She was waited on by a young clerk, and while his back was turned she replaced a diamond ring valued at $150 with a phony ring, and soon after left the store without making a purchase. The substitution of the cheap ring and the loss of the valuable one was discovered before she had gone a block, and she was followed into another store and accused of the theft. She stoutly denied it, but when an officer visited her home she broke down and admitted her guilt. She claimed, however, that she had thrown the ring away after being accused of its theft. It is understood that restitution will be made, and that there will be no prosecution in such event.

To Stop Work and Sport.

The ministers of Pembina county propose to put a stop to the practice of threshing, cutting grain, and shooting chickens on Sunday, or know the reason why. In a series of resolutions adopted by them, and signed by nearly all the pastors in Pembina county, it is recited that it has been divinely ordained that one day be kept as a holy day; that experience has proven that this is beneficial to man, and that the rest is necessary to his welfare; that the state legislature has enacted laws making it obligatory to cease from all business, labor and sport on that day; and that "these laws are being openly violated by various parties by keeping open their places of business, harvesting, threshing, and engaging in other forms of labor, and also by engaging in sports, such as hunting, baseball, etc."

Bold Robbery.

One of the boldest robberies ever committed in the state was perpetrated on the Great Northern westbound flyer at a point just west of Larimore. An old man named Perry, who lives at Butte, and who was accompanied by his daughter, was the victim. As he approached the end of the car in which he was a passenger, one of four men at the door asked him if he could change a twenty-dollar bill. Perry replied that he could, and pulling out a bunch of bills, started to select $20 in change. While thus engaged, another of the men grabbed the money. The man stepped into the vestibule, and Perry was driven back in the car at the point of a revolver, and there was a display of firearms as other passengers stepped to the vestibule.

Acquitted.

The term of district court in Mercer county ended by the dismissal of the case of the State vs. Houser. The defendant was charged with murder, he having shot and killed a neighbor with whom he had a dispute over trespassing cattle. The evidence showed that the man who was killed was the aggressor, and had pursued the defendant with a whiffletree and a knife. After the testimony was all in for the state the judge directed the jury to bring in a verdict of not guilty.

There was also a charge of murder against an Indian woman for killing her husband, but as the justice of the peace who had committed the defendant had not sent up the papers to the district court, the case was dismissed.

Weeds.

Foxtail grass, weeds and other noxious vegetation adorn the roadsides of all North Dakota, helping to scatter injurious seeds in cultivated fields. The experiment has been tried in Walsh county of sowing brome grass seed along the road, and the result has been that wherever it was done the brome grass grew luxuriantly and drove out the foxtail. On all waste land, given over to weeds and noxious grasses, the experience of seeding with brome is believed to be a profitable one as a great deal of good hay can be grown from this grass on a small amount of land.

Narrow Escape.

Lyons & Miller's threshing rig, near Steele, had a narrow escape from destruction by fire. Sparks from the engine ignited the straw pile, and only double-quick work on the part of the crew saved the separator from burning. The straw stack was entirely consumed.

News Notes.

LaMoure has an artesian well that threatens to flood the entire neighborhood. Arrangements will be made to supply the town from this well.

The fire which destroyed the mill at Aneta is said to be the fourth in that town started by hoboes sleeping in barns.

Fire was discovered at Bathgate in the main school building, where coal had been piled too near the furnaces and had taken fire. The citizens were promptly on hand with buckets and had the fire under control before the fire engine arrived.

Before long there will be a lot of stone houses in Williams county, as farmers are using native boulders for building purposes quite extensively. The lignite mines, most of which have been closed during the summer, are being opened, and the fuel is being turned out in large quantities.

North Dakota butter, exhibited at the Minnesota state fair, scored well, and many people who were not formerly aware of the fact became convinced that this is something of a dairy state. In one of the threshing crews in Bottineau county is a former sailor who carries with him a hammock, in which he sleeps in preference to any other bed.

Company B of Fargo is arranging for a new armory site.

LAST STAND OF CUSTER.

Cool and Resolute Conduct of the Famous Fighter and His Brave Men.

The Indians attacked at once. Riding at full gallop along the front of the line on their ponies, they poured a heavy fire from their long-range rifles upon the soldiers, to which the latter made a brave, steady, but not very effective reply with their inferior carbines, writes Cyrus Townsend Brady, in "The Last of Custer," in Pearson's.

The force menacing them was so great that Custer dared not leave his position on the hills. To retreat was hopeless, to advance impossible. They must stand on the defensive and pray that the advance of Reno's command up the valley, which they probably hoped that Benteen would reinforce, would compel the withdrawal of the Indians from their front. They fought on, therefore, coolly and resolutely, husbanding their ammunition and endeavoring to make every shot tell in their galloping, yelling foe.

The Indians, in their accounts, speak of the cool, deliberate courage of numbers of the officers and men, whom they singled out for their bravery. Yet the troopers suffered great loss as the afternoon wore on. Their ammunition began to run low, and the contracting, whirling circle of Indians drove them closer and closer together. The horses were at last stampeded, and with them went some of the reserve ammunition.

It appears that at this time Custer must have endeavored to send a message to Reno, for the body of a solitary soldier, Sergt. Butler, was found after the battle at a point half way between Custer and Reno's command. A little heap of cartridge shells lay near his body, evidencing that he had sold his life dearly.

It was evident to all on the hill as the afternoon drew to its close that they were doomed. It was hardly possible that a counter attack by Reno would save them now, and there were no evidences that he was anywhere in the vicinity. "Where, in God's name," they must have asked themselves in their despair, "could Reno be?"

One of the Crow scouts has said—although his account is generally disbelieved—that he went at last to Custer, as yet unharmed, and told him that he thought he could get him away, and that Custer refused to leave the field. The Crow altered his appearance to look as much like a Sioux as possible, and in the confusion of the fight got away safely. He was the only human survivor of the field. What occurred after is a matter of conjecture, based upon the contradictory and inadequate testimony of the Indians themselves.

On the day they said a Hentley party of a score or more is there to see them off, and no cabin is fuller of flowers than theirs, and no steamer mail more replete with tempting packages and fat letters, one for each day of the voyage and several over; and nobody's friends linger longer, or wave heartier farewells from the dock.

As the last scarlet glimmer of Deacon Smith's bandana fades finally from sight, and the three happy splinters slip below to put their cabin in order and cry a little for pure joy, many strange eyes, friendly already, follow them as they go.

"Bless the sweet old dears!" murmurs one lady of many voyages, in tender envy, to her companion. "Isn't it beautiful to see people at the age that's beyond dreaming, with their dreams coming true?"

THREE HAPPY TRAVELERS.

Wanted Patiently for Their Time of Enjoyment to Come, and It Came.

They are going abroad—Miss Eliza, Miss Adeline and Miss Medora! All Hentley is stirred. Her citizens have enjoyed foreign travel before—wealthy people, young couples on their honeymoons, aspiring teachers, students bound for German universities, or to acquire continental languages, or to study art or music. But one expects it of the younger generation, and of the moneyed, and of the money-makers; one does not expect it of Miss Eliza, Miss Adeline and Miss Medora, says Youth's Companion.

For 30 years they have been the pillars of the church, managers of local charities and tranquil owners of the many-gabled house, oldest on the village street. When they were young, they never expected to cross the ocean; nobody did so then, for pleasure, except the very rich, and—in the case of single ladies—the madly and reprehensibly adventurous. But times have changed and the sisters have received a little legacy, and they are really going to sail next week.

They are deeply happy at the prospect; one feels the happiness even though the unexcited, pleasant voices and the almost apologetic smiles; for at first they are a little shy at talking of the great plan; it is so tremendous a thing, so audacious, so positively breath-taking that they feel almost as if caught enjoying some sportive pastime unbefitting their years. But the shyness wears away, and the enthusiasm of their friends fast kindles their own.

Everybody offers to help. So many people look up diaries and make out itineraries that if the sisters followed them all, their trip would be as endless as that of the Wandering Jew. They have lists of lodgings, and of shops, and of points of view, and of things they must do whatever else they don't, and of things that they mustn't whatever else they do.

They have to promise to cable as soon as they arrive; and their letters are to pass from hand to hand in pre-arranged order; and they are to collect views for the magic lantern of the Sunday school, and buy Fra Angelico angels for the minister's parlor, and prepare pressed English wild flowers for the botany class, and gather souvenirs from literary shrines for the Book club. They ask permission to do commissions for folks, it will keep them from being homesick. They will feel themselves in touch with Hentley all the time.

On the day they said a Hentley party of a score or more is there to see them off, and no cabin is fuller of flowers than theirs, and no steamer mail more replete with tempting packages and fat letters, one for each day of the voyage and several over; and nobody's friends linger longer, or wave heartier farewells from the dock.

TOILETS OF ANTS.

A naturalist has been making observations on the toilets of certain ants, and has discovered each insect goes through the most elaborate ablutions. They are not only performed by herself, but by another, who acts for the time as lady's maid. The assistant starts by washing the face of her companion, and then goes over the whole body. The attitude of the ant that is being washed is one of intense satisfaction. She lies down with all her limbs stretched loosely out; she rolls over on her side, even her back, a perfect picture of ease. The pleasure the little insect evinces in being thus combed and sponged is really enjoyable to the observer.
