our hammer is not misplaced.

Though "his district did not ask our senator to alter his personal opinion to conform to those of the majority," it did say this: "We are in favor of prohibition and the strict execution and enforcement of the statutory prohibitory laws, and are opposed to any repeal or change in said laws that is not approved by the prohibition sentiment of the state." Can this declaration be faithfully followed by endeavoring to impress contrary personal opinions upon the people? Can a man ask for the support of the people who works with his party on some of its issues and streuously opposes others that are equally important? Neither the capitol commission, nor railroad domination are the only questions at issue, though they may be in the minds of some.

Our prohibition law is not safe in the hands of legislators who are its enemies. Therefore this is clearly one of the "points in are these lines from J. H. Simmons, issue." To the average honest ments and better company for our prohibition law than against A. CITIZEN.
