A LITTLE NONSENSE.

Story About a Catfish as Related by Benny.

The catfish is a slippery, gooey kind of fish that inhabits all kinds of water, but prefers dirty water. It looks like a large head with a body and tail stuck on to it. Catfish frequently attain the size of a good, big schoolboy and are quite irritable and ferocious. They have sharp jiggers on their sides and elsewhere with which they can jab you like everything. When you suddenly pull a small catfish with a large head and a yellow underside out of the water and flop it on the bank it sometimes makes a noise like "glug," which is catfish for swearing. Once there was a man who lived on the Mississippi river. A large catfish had broken all his lines and swallowed all his hooks. He made a big iron hook, fastened it to the end of a long leather strap, took a porterhouse steak for bait and caught the catfish. It weighed 214½ pounds. He told another man about it and the other man told father. If it had weighed 215 pounds he would have said so. The works of creation are wonderful. Let us always be honest and courageous and obey our parents and teachers and we will grow up to be useful.—Chicago Tribune.
