The Types Got Mixed,

Being short of help the other day the editor invited old Spilkins to go out and pick up some locals, inasmuch as he was sitting around the COURIER office, smoking up tobacco, and consuming more than he produced.

"You want to wind up my career, I suppose. You think I am unhappy with the old woman, and if you can get me killed off by mixing up the type on me, and slandering somebody, you will be doing me a friendly act. But it won't work. I ain't good enough to be shot in the back for several years yet. An old newspaper pirate named Mulligan, in Oshkosh, asked me, as a special favor, to go out into the cold world and do the very same thing, and it cured me of any desire to meddle with what I don't understand."

"How was that, Mr. Spilkins?"

"Yes, how was it! I suppose you heard about it. Why, I wrote up an old maid's birthday party, and I said, says I, 'The charming Miss Cynthia Guntersnood gave a small birthday party at her father's palatial residence on Jenkins avenue Tuesday night;' and hoped the accomplished young lady (she was forty years old, if a day) would have many more of 'em."

"Well, that was all right,—charming—accomplished—palatial,—regular business."

"Yes, it was all right in the copy; but when the accursed paper came out it read: 'The charming Miss Cynthia Guntersnood gave birth to a small party at her father's palatial residence on Jenkins avenue, Tuesday night. We hope the young lady will have many more of them.' You can laugh! The grinning hyena that put up the job said the types got mixed. I should remark they did some; but old Guntersnood didn't stop to reason. He sat on my front door steps with a shot gun, for two weeks, watching for me to come home; but I never came nearer than two blocks. The barrels on that shot gun looked bigger to me than railroad tunnels. I could see the old man's eyes snap a half a mile. No, thank! Not to-day. Ta! ta!
