Wonderful Foresight.

George D. Prentice, while editor of the Louisville Journal, was often importuned by college men who panted for a chance to send a quiver through the great reading world. A graduate, named Edwards, was so fortunate as to secure a trial on the Journal. He was a modest young man and did not claim that he could, the first week, take quite all the work off Mr. Prentice's hands, but he knew that after the first month he could take the place of the chief editor and discharge his duties in a way that would render the readers oblivious to the change. The great journalist had, by a very dear friend, been recommended to Prentice, consequently, the editor was anxious that the young man should do well. During the afternoon of the third day, Edwards went into Prentice's room, and, with an air of self-confidence, began to boast of his newspaper acquirements.

"There's a great deal in the newspaper business after all," said he.

Mr. Prentice agreed that there was a great deal in the newspaper business after all.

"Yes, sir," Edwards continued, "when I was at school I used to think that a man could learn all about the whole thing in a day or two, but he can't do it. I think, though, that some men inherit a kind of insight into the journalistic profession, don't you?"

"It seems so," Mr. Prentice replied.

"Yes," Edwards resumed, "some men have a natural facility for forming the opinions of others; and, sir, the beauty of it is, the natural product of journalism forms opinion so skillfully that the man who reads it swallows it, and, by George, sir, thinks that he himself formed it."

"Very often the case, no doubt," rejoined Mr. Prentice.

"Now," Edwards went on, "that's what I regard as journalism. None of your slipshod business about that. I suppose, Mr. Prentice, you have observed that I have learned to say things pleasantly."

"Yes."

"That's one acquisition. Now, what next would you advise?"

"Learn something to say."

"Why I-I?" stammered Mr. Edwards, "I thought that—"

"No explanations are necessary," said Mr. Prentice. Then, turning in his chair and bestowing a quizzical look upon the upstart, the man whose idlest pen stroke was sometimes a gouging pasquinade, said:

"Your insight is too clear to enable you to become a journalist!"

"How so?"

"Why, you see through the whole thing. You can look into the business of a newspaper like a prophet could look into the future. This, in the end, must render the business distasteful to you, for, as all strollers will tell you, the most pleasant road to traverse is the one that offers the largest number of surprises—a glimpse of shining water, a moment's view of rich landscape. Therefore, I would advise you to give up the newspaper business, for it will undoubtedly become distasteful, like a monotonous path, too often gone over. I know that it would be a struggle to tear yourself away now, but you should make the sacrifice. You owe it to your father, your mother, your creditors."

The young man, with his head inclined forward, had listened attentively. Looking up, he replied:

"I know there is much truth in what you say, Mr. Prentice, but I have given so much thought to this business, that now, to throw it aside and engage in something else would be changing the course of a life—would be like changing the channel of a mighty river."

Edwards smote his troubled breast, lifted up his moustache, put a finger on each side of his mouth and missed the spittle about six inches.

"I foresee the struggle," said Mr. Prentice, "but because a struggle is foreseen is no reason that it should be averted. Life is a struggle."

"But, Mr. Prentice, what would you advise me to do?"

"Your foresight prompts me to suggest the advisability of running a government. I don't know anything about the chances for getting that kind of a situation at present, but I do know that you could do up the work to the delight of the queen and to the taste of the entire royal household. Let me see. How are you in Greek?"

"First rate."

"Probably you might get a situation as a writer of circus posters."

"I wouldn't like that."

"No? Well, how would you like to float down the river on a raft, spending your spare moments in the study of current navigation, sandbank philosophy and the wholesome casuistry of ferrymen who charge double price when the water is low, because it is low, and double price when the water is high, because it is high?"

"You are making fun of me."

"Oh, no, quite impossible. I can not make anything of you. Here Bill," calling a porter, "let in that other graduate and we'll give him a turn."—Arkansas Traveler.

He Came From Chicago.

"Oh, say, ma," exclaimed a bright little girl at the Hoffman House while at dinner, "hasn't that man over there got awful big ears?"

"Hush, child; the gentleman might hear you," cautioned the mother.

"Well, ma," retorted the precocious youngster, "if he couldn't hear me with those ears he ought to haul 'em down."—New York Journal.

That was a queer anti-tobacco law which the General Court of Connecticut passed in May, 1847. It was ordered that no man under twenty-one and no man over, who was not accustomed to the use of tobacco, should take any until he had a certificate "under the hand of some who are approved for knowledge and skill in physic," that it was useful for him, "and also that he hath received a license for the same." No man was to take tobacco in the street, in the fields or woods, except when on a journey of more than ten miles, or more than once a day, and then not in company with any one.

A distillery has lately been put in operation in Charleston, S. C., for manufacturing oil from pine wood. The material is subjected to intense heat in sealed retorts, and one cord of it is said to yield 15 gallons of turpentine, 80 gallons of pine wood oil, 50 bushels of charcoal, 150 gallons of wood-vinegar and a quantity of inflammable gas and vegetable asphaltum. The oil alone is worth about 25 cents a gallon, and is used by painters and ship builders.
