Dakota is a large territory. One of our enterprising young farmers went out to survey his possessions last week. He was out three days and couldn't find the farm. He ought to have a string on that land.

A winter hen house was built by an Emmons county settler, as follows: He dug down two and a half feet, sodded up a wall three feet above the surface, roofed with polls and straw, banked the earth against the sod, and also six inches deep against the roof, put in a good window on the south side, fed with corn heated in an oven, gave lime water for them to drink, and the grateful birds laid all winter.—Ex.
