in poverty in New Mark Nork. Arthur Or- nor ARTHUR OUTON. ton is either the most injured man or the greatest humbug of the age. And of the latter he is the most persistent and consistent. In 1871, it may be remembered, he appeared in England as SirRoger Tichborne, who was said to have been drowned years before, and as the claimant to immense estates. He bore the marks and many of the characteristics of Sir Roger sufficient to satisfy Lady Tichborne that he was her son. He seemed also to be familiar with the history of the family. But the remarkable thing on the other hand against him was that while Sir Roger was an educated gentleman and a Roman Catholic when he left England, the claimant was scarcely able to read or write, nor could be make "the sign of the cross," one of the simplest marks of a Catholic.

His excuse for this deficiency was that he had forgotten in Australia all that he ever learned in his youth. He was defeated in his attempt to oust those already settled on the estate. Then he was tried and convicted of forgery and perjury after one of the most remarkable trials on record. His sentence was for fourteen years. He served nearly eleven

The Alleged Sir Roger Tichborne Dying in Poverty.

In a small room over a Fourth avenue store, in New York city, is lying the plaintiff in the celebrated Tichborne case that some thirteen years ago excited England to the very throne.

So divided was public opinion in the matter and so confident were those who sided with the claimant that he was the true Sir Roger that
