Death of General Logan.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 26.—General John A. Logan, died three minutes before three o'clock this afternoon. His death, which came with startling suddenness to his family and friends, had not been unexpected by his physicians, for several days. The lurking tendency to brain complication which had been present in a greater or less degree, and constantly increasing in severity during his entire illness, had prepared them to expect the worst. The racking pains which he suffered, during the thirty days of his illness, yielded to treatment, but left him in a very weak condition, from which he never rallied, and upon which the fever preyed with increasing violence, until the hour of his death.

Frozen to Death.

Charley Schroeder, a fourteen year old son of Mr. Wm. Schroeder, who lives about three miles east of the city, lost his way on Saturday night, and was frozen to death. The little fellow was spending the evening at Mr. Pateow's, and left there at about ten o'clock, for home, which is about five or six hundred feet distance in a northwesterly direction. An elder brother was out the same evening, and when he came in, he informed his father, that had it not been for the railroad light, he would have been lost in the storm.

Knowing that it was a cold night, and the storm bewildering to those who were out, the elder brother, with a lantern, went to Pateow's, to accompany Charley home. On reaching there, he learned that Charley had started for home, half an hour before, although they pressed him hard to stay, and not venture out to face the storm. The elder brother returned home, and Charley not arriving, the near neighbors were aroused, and Charles Kinsel, Frank Curtis, Jr., Henry Schroeder, and others, set out with lanterns, to seek the lost boy. They found his tracks, saw how he had lost his course, and followed to where he came to a straw stack, and had again gone on, saw where he had struggled in the deep drifts in ravines he had crossed, and where in his desperation he had made great bounds in the effort to sustain warmth, and life, until shelter might be reached. The search was pushed as long as possible, in the hopes of overtaking him, before too late, but the oil in their lanterns freezing, and two of them having their faces frozen, they were compelled to abandon it. Frank Curtis, plodding in over the pathless prairie, until daylight. Sunday morning the search was continued, and about noon, his brother and Frank Curtis, found the little fellow lying face downward in the snow, where he had sunk from exhaustion, and cold. The struggling tracks, showed that his wasted strength could not possibly hold him up any longer, and with his head turned against the storm, his face covered with his hands, the little boy had laid down upon his bed of frozen snow, while the howling storm shrieked its wicked moan, over the victim of its wrath.

The place where he was found was about six miles south of Oriska, and twelve from where he started. Mr. Schroeder, who is not in good health, is completely prostrated by the affair. The sympathy of the community goes out to the bereaved parents, and the heroism of those who would brave such a storm to save the life of another, is deserving of worthy mention.—Valley City Times.
