KATE TERRY'S ROMANTIC STORY.

A Liverpool Barnard's Rise to the Top of High Life.

In 1870 a man named Flynn kept in Liverpool a drinking shop of an unsavory odor. Burglars, counterfeiters and coolies of various sorts frequented it. Flynn's wife and daughter looked on. The girl was 15 in 1870, and very pretty. She was fair, with intelligent eyes and abundant light hair.

About that time there appeared in the bar-room an American named Charles Bullard. He was the hero of the Boylston Bank robbery in Boston, at which $100,000 had been stolen, and his share of the spoils was $10,000. He was a handsome fellow, of fascinating address. Kate Flynn fell in love with him, and they were married on an acquaintance of three weeks.

Bullard took his $10,000 and his wife to Paris and started a saloon where "American drinks" were concocted and advertised. But he could not keep down his instincts for preying upon society, and his place became the scene of divers swindling games and robberies. On one occasion a Frenchman was robbed of $50,000 worth of diamonds there. Kate got half of them. Bullard fell under the suspicion of the police and fled to London. His wife and bartender broke up the establishment and came to New York. Bullard followed them to New York and endeavored to obtain the property by law suits. He was arrested and thrown into prison. Twice she helped him escape. Once he was recaptured, the second time he got away. He fled to Belgium, committed a burglary, was caught and sentenced to a term of imprisonment. He is still in the Belgian penitentiary serving out his sentence.

KATE LOUISE TERRY.

Kate meantime discovered that he had already a wife when he wedded her. She thereupon regarded her marriage to him as null and void, and looked on herself as a free woman. She had a precarious time of it for several years in New York, letting out lodgings and keeping houses that the police were sometimes suspicious of. At length she became seriously pinched for money, and put up at auction two valuable paintings which she had brought from Paris. At that time (1880) Don Tomas Terry, the richest planter in Cuba, was furnishing a magnificent mansion in New York. He was worth nearly $75,000,000, and money was therefore no object. His son strayed into the auction room where Kate Bullard's paintings were on sale. He was looking for pictures to adorn the new house. Kate, who then called herself Mrs. Williams, was in the room at the time and he was introduced to her. He was tremendously taken with her, and it was all up with him from the first. In March, 1881, he and the beautiful woman who had associated with burglars and thieves all his life, were married. Six weeks ago he died of consumption in the arms of his darling (Kate), and left her the income of $1,750,000, and the absolute ownership of about $2,000,000. Just one month after his death a girl baby was born to Mrs. Terry, that, if it lives, will inherit the bulk of the wealth. But the mother will control it all.

She is coming to New York with her baby and her husband's body. It is said that she has never lost her affection for Bullard, the burglar husband, but will marry him when his time is out in Belgium. Terry's funeral in Paris was a very grand one, and the United States consul and other officials attended it and treated the widow with the utmost respect. She is somebody now.

SAMUEL COMPERS,

President of the New Federation of Trades.

The trades union convention recently held in Columbus, O., resulted in the formation of a federation of trades unions under the name of the New American Federation of Trades, the object of which is to preserve the identity of the long established trades unions and prevent their becoming subservient to the Knights of Labor. To emphasize this they elected as president Samuel Compers, who is one of the staunchest advocates of the trades union form of organization among labor.

Mr. Compers was born in London in 1850. His parents were from Holland. His father being a carpenter, young Compers began work at his trade at the age of 14, attending school in the evenings. He came to New York in 1872. In 1875 he became a member of one of the first organized unions. For the past sixteen years he has been a delegate to every convention of the Organized International Union. It is said that it is chiefly through Mr. Compers' knowledge of the principles of trades unions that the organizers have become the most successful of unions. Mr. Compers was first vice-president of the old Federation of Trades and Labor Unions, organized at Philadelphia in 1881; subsequently he was president for two terms. He is now president of the Workmen's assembly for the state of New York.

Discovery of a Treasure.

For some time past rumors have been current in Constantinople of the discovery of a fabulous treasure in the district of Sivas, in Asia Minor, and the attention of the government having been called to the matter, the report has been proved to have some foundation. It seems that an Armenian of the name of Kupelyan noticed that several inhabitants of Sivas displayed curious gold coins, which, on being questioned as to their origin, they said had been found in a region inhabited by poor shepherds. Inquiries, and finally excavations, are said to have revealed a buried temple, whose interior is described as containing jewels of all kinds, as well as many gold coins.—Chicago Herald.

"And you have perused all the papers?" continued Mr. Wiles.

"I've read every paper, every speech, every affidavit, every decision, every argument," said the stranger, "and I've practiced a formula.
