Tree Planting and the Blizzards.

I have been much interested in watching the effect of tree planting upon the blizzards. The blizzard drives along the surface of the ground, and it has for ages upon ages found no tree to halt or veer it. The settlers on the plains planted trees, however, and these trees now stand as obstacles to the full sweep of the ice laden wind. A few days ago, as a blizzard swept over the country, I passed through a loosely planted grove of trees, cottonwoods, silver maples, green ashes, etc., and noted with pleasure that among the trees the violence of the wind was greatly reduced, and the flakes of snow dropped lazily to the ground, where they rested as contentedly as if they had fallen upon the tree covered hills of New England.

As soon as I passed out of the grove I had to face again the furious flakes, driving horizontally in their mad career over the earth. As often as I passed through a little grove of trees I found that I left the blizzard; but as soon as I emerged from the sheltering trees the blast struck me again in all its fury. This bit of experience is duplicated thousands of times every day upon the plains. The tree planter has routed the blizzard wherever he has set his little army of trees.—Professor Charles E. Bessey in American Agriculturist.

Green Eyed People.

In a paper on the color of eyes in France M. Topinard has called attention to the extreme rarity of greenish eyes in Europe, only six cases having been observed by Professor Virchow in 6,000,000 Germans. With us a green eyed person must be fully as uncommon a sight. Yet Chinese annals record that green eyes abound in parts of Asia, and Pallas notes they are met with in Siberia.—Arkansas Traveler.
